FAQ

How good is our sharpening?

The number of blades, combs & cutters that we sharpen is now tens of thousands a year—and growing rapidly. The rising demand speaks to the skill of our technicians and our service. Large blades are sharpened on a $65,000 automated lapping machine (we never grind them). The result is equal to (or better) than new. Combs and cutters are done on a high speed grinder.

Beware: Blades, combs & cutters are easily damaged during sharpening by those without proper machines and methods.

How do I prevent rusting?

Rusty blades and combs are harder to push through fiber and wool. And rusted blades and combs do not take or hold a cutting edge.

Rust can start on high carbon steel in less than 3 hours. Just the weak acid from your fingers on blade or comb steel that's not protected by lubricant is enough to cause rusting.

To prevent rust, never leave blades and/or combs more than an hour without a protective oil cover. After every use, clean, dry and coat them with oil (clipping or motor). Do not use spray-on coolants for this.

Spray-on coolants and lubricants?

Coolants rapidly lower blade/comb/head temperatures...but they are not lubricants. So use coolants in addition to, not in lieu of, oil.

Lubricants in spray cans/bottles vary a great deal in the % of useful oil in them. The higher the % of oil the better the result will be.

What's the most common abuse?

Failure to lubricate often enough with a quality oil. Why don't users oil more often? Some think wet wool is a lubricant. It's a myth. Water is a coolant only.

Some fear that excess oil will stain white wool or hair. To prevent this apply only 3 drops to the blade or cutter tips more often. Then run the machine for 3 seconds. Finally, use a rag to wipe surplus oil from the blades. Then resume work.
